

August 21, 2007

The faculty and staff of the Department of Communication Sciences and Disorders welcome you to the 2007-2008 academic year. For those of you who have already been in graduate school in this department and are returning, welcome back (and remember how you felt this time a year ago!). For those of you who are new to the department, we are delighted you are here, and we will make every effort to insure that you receive an outstanding education in the academic, clinical, and research aspects of communication sciences and disorders.

This handbook has been developed to provide you with a resource that you can use throughout your time here. In it you will find answers to questions such as, “How do I document my clinical practicum?”, “How do I apply for ASHA certification and state licensure?”, and “What courses should I sign up for?” First year students should bring the handbook to the orientation session that has been set up to ease the transition into graduate school. At all times, you should keep it available as a reference.

We are looking forward to an outstanding year, and we are glad that you will be a part of it!!!

Christine Sapienza, Ph.D.
Professor and Chair
Comm. Sciences & Disorders

Judith M. Wingate, Ph.D.,CCC/SLP
Clinical Assistant Professor
Director of Clinical Education